Essential Steps in Sowing Seeds

For Out of Doors

Select a well-drained place.

Spade soil deeply, mixing in a generous amount of humus in the form of old manure, leaf mold or peat moss. If the soil is a stiff clay, include some sand or screened coal ashes.

Level the surface and water thoroughly before sowing the seeds.

Barely cover the seeds with sifted soil or peat moss and never allow the soil to dry out.

Remember that some seeds, such as Zinnias and Marigolds, will germinate in a few days and need no other covering.

Other seeds, particularly perennials such as Aquilegia and Pyrethrum, are slow to germinate and will benefit by a covering of burlap.

As seedlings grow, thin out according to size of plant.

For Indoors

Use pots, boxes or pans having holes in the bottom for drainage.

Place rough charcoal or broken pieces of pots over the holes.

Fill with sandy loam containing about one-third humus.

Water soil thoroughly before sowing seeds.

Barely cover the seeds with sifted soil and place a piece of glass, slightly raised for air, over the top, keeping this on until the seeds germinate.

Keep in an even temperature as near 70 degrees as possible.

A sunny window is an ideal place for the seedlings.
